

An Equestrian Interlude in Ireland

Typical Day

Breakfast is served at 9.00am during which time an instructor will discuss with you the day's activities, which horse you would like to ride and which discipline you would like your lesson in.

Around 10.00am guests usually go onto the yard to assist in the preparation of the horse that they will be riding; don't worry staff are available to help and advise you if required. After this, lessons will commence in your chosen discipline in either the indoor or outdoor school. Lunch is taken at around 12.45pm in the house; this usually consists of quiche, toasted sandwiches, homemade soup, granary bread, salad etc. The ride out this afternoon takes place around 2.30pm, now you will leave for the fields and the choice is yours again; you can either enjoy some schooling practice over the huge variety of cross-country fences or just relax and enjoy the view! We know that the vast majority of riders do not aspire to compete and jump big fences so there are lots of small logs and simple jumps for those who just want to have fun. However, if you do have aspirations for greater things there are jumps to suit you too. At 4.30pm the horses are untacked and put away for a rest and you too will have time to relax before your evening meal. You can take a trip into the local town which is only 6 minutes away by car, or maybe just read a book from the large selection available in the house. Dinner is served at 7.00pm, this is time for everyone to chat about the day's events and can continue late into the night in typical Irish fashion!

Accommodation

Your accommodation for the duration of your stay can only be described as first class, the granary barn has been sumptuously fitted out to the highest standards with pitch-pine floors, oak beams and open fires. All of the bedrooms are en-suite and there is a choice of family rooms, twin rooms and double rooms. Accommodation is full board, all meals are catered for in the superb bistro where food is freshly prepared using local produce.

Transport

The centre is only 50 miles from Dublin where low cost flights are available from Ryan Air and Aer Lingus. Collection can be arranged from the airport, although the most economical option is to hop on the airport bus service which stops in the local town and you will be collected from here.

Non-riders

Non-riders are welcome, here in the heart of Ireland there are a host of local attractions to visit so you can be sure that you won't be bored!

Prices

One week full board (7 nights) and 12 hours of riding costs £920.00 per person.

Weekend breaks for 2 nights on full board and 4 hours of riding costs £300 per person and 4 nights on full board and 6 hours of riding costs £545 per person.

Single supplement of £15 per night.

There is a 20% discount for under 12 year olds and a much reduced non-rider price.
